Description of Terms

Signature Font – Complete signature including first name, middle initial (if desired) and last name.

First Name in a separate key – Separate key used to sign first name for informal correspondence.

Initials in a separate key - Separate key used to sign initials only.

Closing remarks in a Separate Key - Separate key used to sign closing remarks such as "Sincerely," "Best Regards," "Love," etc.

Font Embedding Levels:

Restricted license embedding: No embedding allowed; the font can not be embedded in any document even if the "embed fonts" option is checked in your program. This means that your signature font characters will not be viewable on a computer that doesn't have the font installed and a default font will be used in its place.

Print and Preview embedding: The font will only be embedded in documents temporarily on the remote system. Documents can only be opened read-only. Although your signature font will be viewable on a recipients computer, the recipient isn't able to reproduce it or cut-and-paste your signature. Also, they can only print and view the document; they can't edit it. If your signature font has the Print/Preview Embedding feature, you can turn the embedding off by not selecting the "embed fonts" option in your program when saving the file.

Editable embedding: Fonts will only be embedded temporarily on the remote system. Similar to Print/Preview Embedding except that it allows editing of the document. Recipients are not able to use your signature font and can't reproduce or cut-and-paste it.

Installable embedding: Fonts may be embedded in documents and permanently installed on the remote system. This provides flexibility since the recipient of your document will actually have your font permanently installed on their computer. They will have access to your font to use in whatever way they wish. You can turn the embedding off by not selecting the "embed fonts" option in your program.
